The whole approach of the letter is to communicate an overall risk management strategy, not necessarily answer the "are you safe" question. It's like trying to answer the question, "Are you safe crossing the street?" Like it or not we're all in the risk management business. It's a matter of managing the risk to a reasonable high degree of confidence. Besides our yearly Water Quality Reports speak for themselves.

The letter is stand-alone from that going out under the Mayor's and City Manager's signature. There was some overlap regarding the stewardship issues but I thought it was appropriate because it ties into the risk management strategy that I'm trying to communicate with this letter.

Guys,

I am a bit swamped today, so I have not read through this carefully yet. I was expecting more of a definitive statement of protectiveness upfront. Are you safe? yes or no. Current conditions would say yes. Still, there will be backstops and monitoring in the future.

You guys are not combining this with the stewardship letter, right?

Thanks,
Michael

All –

Here's a draft of the "protectiveness" and "stewardship" letter we've been discussing for your review and comment. My approach was that even though the letter is addressed to Michael, the audience may be much broader, depending on how he wants to use the letter. You'll notice that I borrowed a few phrases from Bruce's letter that I thought would be important to include in this letter as well. The letter will most likely be signed by either Sue Founé or myself.

Thanks,

Mike Wetzel, PE
